

Compass Clinic, a dynamic, evidence-based practice offering psychological services (assessment and therapy) is looking for psychologists to join our thriving practice. We are well known in the community with a strong referral network and good relationships with schools and pediatricians. Candidates must be registered or eligible for registration with the College of Psychologists of BC. The ideal candidate will have strong skills in the assessment of children/adolescents. We are currently looking for one or two psychologists to help with psychoeducational assessments and/or assessments of neurodevelopmental conditions including FASD and autism. These include private assessments and assessments contracted from health authorities for children with neurodevelopmental disorders (these assessments are completed in the context of a multidisciplinary team). There are opportunities for outreach travel for those who are interested. Because of the combination of private and contracted assessments, our client population is socioeconomically and culturally diverse. We would also invite applications from psychologists who are interested in therapy addressing anxiety in young children, parenting support, and support of individuals with ASD. We offer professional development and group learning opportunities. We see ourselves as an ideal location for early career psychologists due to the availability of mentoring and peer support but are also open to applications from psychologists established in their careers. This job offers the flexibility to take on as much or as little as desired and is paid as a fee-sharing agreement based on the number of clients seen. We offer optional psychometry support. Compass is conveniently located at Commercial and Grant Streets in Vancouver. Please direct enquiries, including a brief cv, to Dr. Christine Lilley, info@compassclinic.ca.
